Course Description

This course presents United States history from a chronological perspective, beginning with the pre-Columbian era in the Americas and concluding with the beginning of the Reconstruction period. It addresses the geographic, social, political, economic, and multicultural factors that shaped the American landscape. It is especially noteworthy to consider the multiple agents of change with European, African, and Indigenous origins who were responsible for the economic and political development of North America.

The course has four major goals: to provide students with sufficient background knowledge from an economic, political, and social perspective in order to prepare them for high school social studies; to prepare students to participate in American society and government and advocate for social justice; and to facilitate students' acquisition of skills needed to think critically and become life-long learners; and to improve students' research skills to encourage independent thinking.

Instruction emphasizes the development of higher order thinking through debate, Socratic seminars, cooperative learning, and analysis of critical texts. Students will be able to interpret current events through the use of technology, databases, and primary and secondary sources of information, and will learn to participate in society by appreciating local history with a global perspective.
